

2 comments for the FCC.

1) I spend a lot of time outside my house. I like being able to record my favorite shows and view them at a time more convenient for me. By law, I am allowed to do this. If HDTVs are required to have copy protection, there will be no incentive for me to purchase an HDTV receiver.

2) Forcing HDTV receivers to implement copy protection will add to the cost of owning one. Non-HDTV receivers are still cheaper to own than HDTV ones and will continue that way if extra copy protection equipment is required.

As a consumer, if copy protection is required, I will not buy into HDTV technology, helping the technology to die.